METEOROLOGY *

JANUARY.

During the greater part of the month the weather was abnormally mild, a striking feature being the frequency with which maxima between 52°F and 60°F were recorded. There were 22 such days at Dublin (Phoenix Park), 21 at Baldonnell, and 20 at Birr Castle. The only really cold weather occurred between the 11th and 14th. At Dublin (Fitzwilliam Square) only thrice during the past 55 Januaries has the mean temperature exceeded that of January of this year (47.1°F); in 1875 it was 47.4°F; in 1898, 47.8°F; and in 1916, 47.7°F. Throughout the month the type of weather was persistently cyclonic, with the result that the high temperatures which were so widely experienced were accompanied nearly everywhere by much precipitation.

* Furnished by the Director of the Meteorological Office. For further information the reader is referred to the Monthly Weather Report (Price 6d., post free 7d.) and other publications of the Meteorological Office. Maps illustrating the distribution of rainfall, pressure, temperature, and sunshine are given in the Monthly Weather Report. The normal values for each month, mostly based on 35 years' observations, are shown in "The Book of Normals of Meteorological Elements for the British Isles." (M.O. 236 (Section I.), 1919, Price 2s. net.)

FEBRUARY.

During the greater part of February the weather was of an anticyclonic type, and in consequence strong winds and gales were rare, and the rainfall was small. There was also an absence of snow and hail, and fog was only rarely reported. On the 4th there were some heavy falls of rain in Kerry and Limerick, as much as 44mm. being recorded at Killarney and 43mm. at Foynes. A notable feature of the month's weather was the very high atmospheric pressure recorded on the 27th, when the barometer at Cahirciveen (Valencia Observatory) rose to 1048.3mb. (30.96 in.), within 5mb of the highest pressure on record at this station, (1053.2mb on January 28th, 1905).

MARCH.

As in the two previous months there was a marked absence of severe wintry weather. There were, however, many rain days, and at Dunfanaghy (Donegal) rain fell on every day of the month; there were 30 rain-days at Blacksod Point, 29 at Markree Castle (Sligo), and 28 at Killarney and Cahirciveen, the latter station experiencing a downpour of more than 25mm. on the 12th. For the first time this year snow fell in Dublin, and this happened twice, namely, on the 14th and 28th. The traditional easterly winds of March were conspicuously absent. There was also a very general absence of fog.

NOTE.—This table has been constructed for the years 1847 to 1851.—By taking the English average birth-rate of 1 in 31, deducting the number of deaths and the number of emigrants in each year, as given in the Irish Census Reports of 1851; an allowance, proportioned to the number of recorded deaths and the number of emigrants being made in each year for the excess of the number thus arrived at for 1851 over the actual population according to the Census of that year.

1852 to 1871.—The English birth and death-rates, as above, were used, deducting the number of emigrants, according to the returns obtained by the Registrar-General for Ireland, and allowing for excess over Census numbers for 1861 and 1871, as explained for the last period.

1872 to 1914.—By adding the Births registered in each year to the estimated population for the previous year, deducting the deaths and emigration, and adjusting the results for the years 1872-81, 1882-91, 1892-1901, and 1902-1911, to allow for the discrepancy between the number thus arrived at for 1881, 1891, 1901, and 1911 respectively, and the population as shown by the Census in each of these years.

1915 to 1921.—The estimated population for each of these years has been computed as in 1914, with some additional adjustments with regard to the movements of the military.

METEOROLOGY.*

APRIL.

In Ireland the mean temperature and the mean daily amount of sunshine during April were both above the normal, but the rainfall was below the normal, the general character of the month being sunny and dry. The mean monthly air pressure was abnormally high, and at Valentia Observatory the mean for the month (1022·5 mb) equalled the value for 1912, and with the exception of 1896 was the highest mean for April in records extending as far back as 1866. The distribution of pressure was of an anti-cyclonic type, conditions which were reflected in the small rainfall, a narrow strip along the south coast of Ireland receiving only 25 per cent of the normal precipitation.

MAY.

The weather was, on the whole, fine and dry during May. There was a cold spell of some intensity during the opening days of the month, but warm conditions prevailed during the second third of the month, and on the 24th a temperature of 75°F was recorded at Kilkenny and at Seskin (Carrick-on-Suir). At Valencia observatory the maximum temperature for the month was only 64°F, and at this station the temperature at 13h did not once rise above the normal between the 2nd and 20th.

JUNE.

June was abnormally dry, with a mean monthly temperature and a mean daily sunshine both above the normal. In the south-west of Ireland at Valencia Observatory the scarcity of rain was remarkable, and the total recorded was only 2·6 mm, being the lowest fall in any calendar month at this station since the record was started in 1869. The nearest approach to it occurred in May, 1896, when 5·9 mm were recorded. Commonly the hottest day of the month was the 25th, on which day a maximum temperature of 85°F was recorded at Mountmellick and Killarney, and 84°F at Kilkenny and Lisburn.

Maps illustrating the distribution of rainfall, pressure, temperature, and sunshine are given in the Monthly Weather Report. The normal values for each month, mostly based on 35 years' observations, are shown in "The Book of Normals of Meteorological Elements for the British Isles." The rate under the former heading is 0.1 above, but that under the latter heading 0.8 below the average rate for the corresponding quarter of the previous ten years.

METEOROLOGY.*

JULY.

July was a very warm month and was the seventh month in succession in which the mean temperature, both in Ireland North and South, was above the normal. On the 12th a temperature of 90°F was recorded at Killarney and 87°F at Foynes and Mountmellick. In Dublin, at Fitzwilliam Square, 82°F was recorded on the 9th, being the warmest day experienced here since July, 1905. The rainfall was very generally above the normal, and on the 28th as much as 68mm. fell at Mountmellick and 64mm. at Waterford.

AUGUST.

Temperature was considerably lower than in July. There were also many rain-days, several stations having as many as twenty-six. In Dublin the month was cloudy, with frequent showers and fresh westerly and north-westerly winds. The mean temperature was 1.6°F below the normal, and the rainfall was 12mm. less than the normal, but the number of rain-days (23) was large. On the 19th the Irish Sea was covered by a thick fog.

SEPTEMBER.

The fine and warm weather, which has proved so characteristic a feature of the present year, but which received a temporary check during August, was again experienced during the greater part of September. The rainfall in Ireland was everywhere below the normal, but approached it most closely in the Central Plain. Both in the North and in the South temperature and sunshine were above the normal. In Dublin nearly half of the total rainfall for the month (34mm.) was registered on the 12th, when there was a downpour of 16mm.

* Furnished by the Director of the Meteorological Office. For further information the reader is referred to the Monthly Weather Report (Price 6d., post free 7d.) and other publications of the Meteorological Office. Maps illustrating the distribution of rainfall, pressure, temperature, and sunshine are given in the Monthly Weather Report. The normal values for each month, mostly based on 35 years' observations, are shown in "The Book of Normals of Meteorological Elements for the British Isles." METEOROLOGY *

OCTOBER.

In Ireland the mean temperature during October was everywhere in excess of the normal. During the night of the 5th-6th some abnormally high temperatures were recorded, and at Valencia Observatory a minimum of 63° F. was registered, a reading which was a record for the time of year at this station. Generally speaking there was an excess of precipitation in the northern part of the country and a deficiency in the southern. The mean daily amount of sunshine was considerably below the normal.

NOVEMBER.

November in Ireland was generally rather mild, although sunshine was deficient, especially in the South. Rainfall was in excess of the normal over most of the eastern half of the country, and in Co. Down the rainfall was 50 per cent. above the normal. Over a large area there was a deficiency, and the area over which 200 mm fell was much smaller than usual, being confined entirely to Kerry and Connemara. In Dublin the weather was variable. The opening days were mild, but on the 6th a sudden change occurred, and snow fell on the early morning of the 8th. After the 9th the weather again became mild and unsettled.

DECEMBER.

During December the weather in Ireland was generally mild and unsettled. Under the influence of a constant succession of atmospheric depressions from the Atlantic there were strong and persistent westerly winds, a high temperature, and frequent rain. Less than half the normal rainfall was, however, recorded in the south-eastern part of the country. In this area less than 25 mm of precipitation were measured, but in the north-west more than 100 mm fell generally.

For further information the reader is referred to the Monthly Weather Report (Price 6d., post free 7d.) and other publications of the Meteorological Office. Maps illustrating the distribution of rainfall, pressure, temperature, and sunshine are given in the Monthly Weather Report. The normal values for each month, mostly based on 35 years' observations, are shown in "The Book of Normals of Meteorological Elements for the British Isles."
